A PUBLISHED REVIEW

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

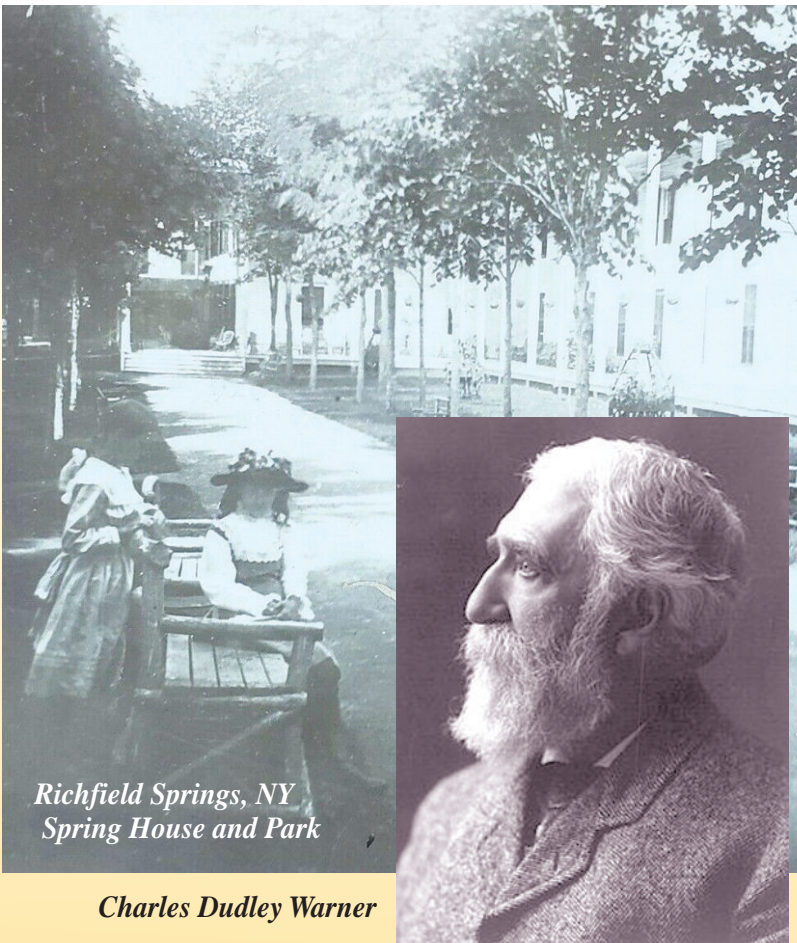

One of the many visitors to Richfield Springs during its 'Golden Age' of importance as a resort area was Charles Dudley Warner. At the time of his visit in 1882, Mr. Warner was on a mission to report for the HARPER'S MAGAZINE. Here is what he had to say about his visit to Richfield and his stay at the Spring House:

"Every watering place has a character of its own and those who have given little thought to this are surprised at the endless variety in the American resorts, but what is even more surprising is the influence that these places have upon the people that frequent them, who appear to change their characters with their surroundings. One woman in her season, plays many parts, dashing in one place, reserved in another; now gay and active, now listless and sentimental; not at all the same woman at Newport that she is in the Adirondack camps; one thing at Bar Harbor and quite another at Saratoga or at Richfield. Different tastes to be sure, are suited to different resorts but fashion sends a steady procession of the same people on the round of all.

The charm of Richfield Springs is in the character of the landscape. It is a limestone region of gentle slopes and fine lines and although it is elevated the general character is refined rather than bold. The fertile valleys in pleasing irregularity fall away from rounded wooded hills in a manner to produce the impression of peace and repose. The lay of the land is such that an elevation of a few hundred feet gives most extensive prospects, a view of meadows and upland pastures, of lakes and ponds, of forests hanging in dark masses on the limestone summits, of fields of wheat and hops and of distant mountain ranges. It is scenery that one grows to love and that responds to one's very mood, a variety of beauty. In a whole summer, the pedestrian will not exhaust the inspiring view of and the drive through the gracious land, over hills, round the lakes, by woods and farms, increasing in interest as one knows them better. The habitués of the place, year after year, are at a loss for words to convey their peaceful satisfaction.

In the smiling country lies the pretty village of Richfield Springs,, the rural character of which is not entirely lost by reason of the hotels, cottages and boarding houses which line the broad principal street. The center of the town is the old Spring House and grounds.

When our travelers are sighted in the evening at the mansion, they are reminded of an English inn, though it is not at all like an inn in England except in its atmosphere of comfort. The building has rather a colonial character with its long corridors and pillared piazzas, built at different times and without any particular plans except to remain old-fashioned. It is now a big rambling white mass of buildings in the midst of maple trees with many stairs and passages in different levels and so many nooks and corners that the stranger is always getting lost in it -turning up in the luxurious smoking room when he wants to dine and opening a door that lets him out into the park when he is trying to go to bed. But there are few hotels in the country where the guests are so well taken care of.

Of course, the main reason for being here is the sulphur spring. There is no doubt of its efficiency. I suppose it is as unpleasant as any in the country. Everybody smells it and a great many drink it. It renews youth and although the analyzer does not say that it is a 'love philter' the statistics kept by the autocrat who ladles out the fluid, shows that there are made as many engagements at Richfield as at any other summer fair in the country."

Charles Dudley Warner(1829-1900) was an essayist, novelist, author and friend of Mark Twain. Born in Claremont, Massachusetts, his family moved to Cazenovia, NY and he later graduated from Hamilton College in Clinton in 1851.

His choice of employment varied through the years with everything from being a member of a surveying party in Missouri to studying law. After receiving his certification, he relocated to Chicago where he practiced law from 1856-1860. He then relocated to Connecticut to become assistant editor of THE HARTFORD PRESS. By 1861, he had become editor, holding that position until 1867 when the paper merged into the HARTFORD COURANT. IN 1884, he joined the editorial staff of HARPER'S MAGAZINE where his travel articles appeared under 'The Editor's Study'.

Warner was noted for making quips that were frequently misattributed to his friend Mark Twain who often used them in his humorous lectures. Two of his most frequently quoted remarks are: 'Politics makes strange bedfellows' and 'Everybody complains about the weather but nobody does anything about it!'

Fall Leaf Pick Up Info and Rules:

- Keep sticks and rocks out of leaf piles as this damages our equipment and makes leaf pick up less efficient.

- Leaf pick up will occur depending on weather and leaf drop.

- Leaf piles are preferred but if you want to bag them, please use paper bags. (No Plastic Bags)

- Branches and green waste should be separated from leaf piles and will still be picked up on Mondays or once leaves really start falling on an as needed basis.

Know Your Limits

Maybe you like the feel of the open road or maybe you're just in a hurry. But the fact remains, that speed limits are carefully set to give you the safest possible driving speed for each road's particular traffic conditions. And because speeding is dangerous, the penalties are stiff.

So whenever time is of the essence, start out early and obey your local speed signs. Then you can enjoy a safe and leisurely ride without having to worry about the fines.
